Fertilizer Derivatives End of Day Report

FUTURES MARKET COMMENTARY

NOLA: Odd day in the NOLA UREA market. For starters, in the physical market prices were seen much lower than where they were yesterday trading $625 (2x) for September delivery, that's down $15 from last done yesterday and from where it traded at earlier in the morning session ($640 was the first bid that traded this morning). One would think that we would see softness in the futures market, but Q1 futures were a bit firmer than they were yesterday trading $680 for Q1 then $690, late in the day. It is worth mentioning that Q4 traded as well today at $640 in the same time that $680/$690 traded for Q1. It's odd, if prices continue to soften on spot phys we'll likely see futures prices continue to soften.

INTL: International markets were slow again, and the market was seller heavy as offers dropped lower as they chased bids. Bids were thin and nothing has been reported trading in the market. Sellers came in across the contracts and across the curve, but as the offers dropped it didn't lead to drawing out bids. However, Dutch TTF rallied again throughout the day.
