Market Commentary / Recent Trades

The Singapore iron ore market opened the morning session at $105.10, trading in a narrow range between $104.60 and $105.35. Activity remained subdued during the early hours, with price action failing to break out of these bounds. However, momentum shifted in the afternoon as the price broke higher, reaching a daily and session-high close of $106.15.

Morning spread activity was limited, with Dec/Jan spreads trading at $0.25 in 20kt and $0.30 in a cumulative 100kt. A 2H-25 spread also traded at 16.5ktm. By contrast, the afternoon session saw heightened activity, with Q1/Q2 spreads trading at $1.10 across multiple clips totaling 200ktm. Dec/Q1 spreads recorded significant volume at $0.45, with trades totalling 405x135ktm. Outright buying interest was evident in Q1, with 50ktm traded, while Q2 traded across smaller 5-10ktm clips. Longer-dated structures saw Cal25 trading in increments of 7.5ktm+. Post-session activity highlighted a notable sell on Feb/March spreads, trading at $0.35 in 50kt.

Broader commodity markets also saw gains, supported by optimism surrounding potential economic stimulus from China's Central Economic Work Conference. This followed signals from the Politburo regarding bolder measures to stimulate growth and address trade challenges. Nickel led gains on the London Metal Exchange, rising 1.4% to $16,075 per ton, with copper and iron ore also advancing amid renewed investor confidence.
