Crude prices have pushed higher again as geopolitical risk intensifies, driven by unrest in Iran, rising expectations of possible US involvement following President Trump's latest comments, and reports of drone strikes on tankers near the CPC terminal. Brent MAR 26 is up 3%. President Trump urged Iranians to continue protesting, posting that "help is on its way," his clearest signal yet of potential US intervention. He reiterated that any country trading with Iran would face a 25% tariff. The unrest in Iran raises the risk of a significant supply disruption, according to BCA Research. Near-term crude option skews have shifted further toward calls since Trump's post, with call bias now at its strongest since the 12-Day War in June 2025. Trafigura and Vitol plan to relocate Venezuelan crude into Caribbean storage as a staging point for exports after being asked by the US to market the barrels. Bloomberg reported the oil is already being offered to refiners in Texas and Louisiana.
